The new life of work.

At Coalesse, when we think about work, we ask — how can work be more human?

We were born from a passionate belief that work can be a place where you want to go, not where you have to go. And we know that people around the world are searching for this greater appeal and deeper purpose from their surroundings. We're helping workplaces become those essential hubs — by building richer social connections, empowering creative collaboration, and supporting personal focus and rejuvenation throughout each day. The best places bring us together, to make the hard work we do better. This is what defines the new life of work.

Our work is to instill these spaces with warmth, vitality and soul. We bring modern craft to all the ways we solve for more enjoyable, meaningful destinations, both indoors and out, that enliven your wellbeing and elevate your comfort. It's why we look further, to create products and custom capabilities that make the best experiences possible — furnishings that embody insight and inspiration; that are drawn from curiosity and discovery; and that delight with beauty and mastery. And it's why we're so responsive at every step, to help you perfect your work now, even as we invent what you'll need next.

Led by intuition, backed by research, and driven by design
— we help you bring new life to work.

---

Coalesse was founded in the San Francisco Bay Area and our culture has always celebrated the warm, natural beauty of California. We carry that warmth in the way we create and design.

Warmth increases our ease, trust and delight as we relate to one another. We care about listening to what people need, and anticipating what they'll want, to help improve their day.

---

We thrive in the presence of connection — person to person, human to nature, art to science. And when we embrace the unexpected, we're inspired to create solutions that both work and matter.

15

We find soul everywhere, from a team of people to the projects they make, the essence of a company to the whole of a city. And from these soulful places, we're better able to stretch and grow.

Approach.

It's possible to feel good while working well. This is our approach in everything we do — to improve your sense of wellbeing. We develop furnishings and capabilities that balance all the dimensions of comfort with the dynamic science of function. We draw from creative, cultural and critical thinking, because we believe design and knowledge together can make work more welcoming, effortless and meaningful.

We are led by intuition, backed by research, and driven by design.

Potrero415 Table Collection

Form frees function. Shared experiences have never been more essential at work. Potrero415 captures the fine art and modern craft of the communal table, for the ways we gather today. Iconic in form and innovative in structure, the system has an open architecture that permits many custom choices in scale, shape, materials and color. Slender new tables in the collection fill the gap for the smaller, in-between social and collaborative spaces that add valuable destinations to the workday.

Designed by Coalesse Design Group

“These tables naturally attract people to gather, yet they have the power and responsiveness of active workspaces.”

Curiosity & Discovery.

Montara650 Rocker

Comfort in motion. What happens when people rock at work? This question inspired the partnering of Coalesse product design with some of the first research of its kind, to show that rocking chairs can promote richer connections in the workplace. Rocking moves us to a state of ease, but surprisingly, it also improves how we relate to each other. A good rocking chair increases all four dimensions of comfort — physical, social, cognitive and emotional.

“Rocking is both relaxing and bonding. We become collaborative, and genuinely good contributors, when we’re more comfortable with each other.”

Point of View.

It's the imprint that defines who we are. It's how we see and interpret everyday life that makes our ideas distinct. Our point of view at Coalesse is guided by three foundational themes — Comfort, Craft and Customization — that enrich everything we make.

This year we've explored the culture of modern craft, with the rich mix of hand, machine and mind that allows us to make things, better.

The Culture of Modern Craft.

How We Create

Craft is always about making. Really, it's about the essential creative pursuit of how to make things, better.

We believe that craft is modern in every age. And technology has always been craft's tool. Innovation has always been the process of people stretching beyond the best methods available up to that time — the daring to rethink how to do things in more efficient, elegant and groundbreaking ways. As we grow more sophisticated in what we can make and how we make it, pioneers and designers continually invent remarkable new solutions that once might not have been thought possible. And yet they also find new places to preserve the irreplaceable techniques of the past. The beauty of how we participate in the culture of modern craft today is that we can create new mastery out of these combinations. We move from the hand-made all the way to the machine-made — and back again.

What Makes Craft.

These four traits constantly combine, evolve and inform what we can create in the culture of modern craft.

The Ingredients

Beauty is expressed in the unique properties of each material as they are refined into an artful form.

The Spark

Curiosity drives the pursuit of knowledge that makes our products more thoughtful and human.

The Tools

Innovation is the reason we equip ourselves with technology — to remain relevant, to explore and inspire.

The Pioneers

Traditions of mastery show us the heritage in where we've been, so we know where we're going.

“Craft drives us to solve today’s problems with better tools. At the same time, it lets us preserve an expression of beauty that makes the modern world feel less cold.”

Lew Epstein
General Manager, Coalesse

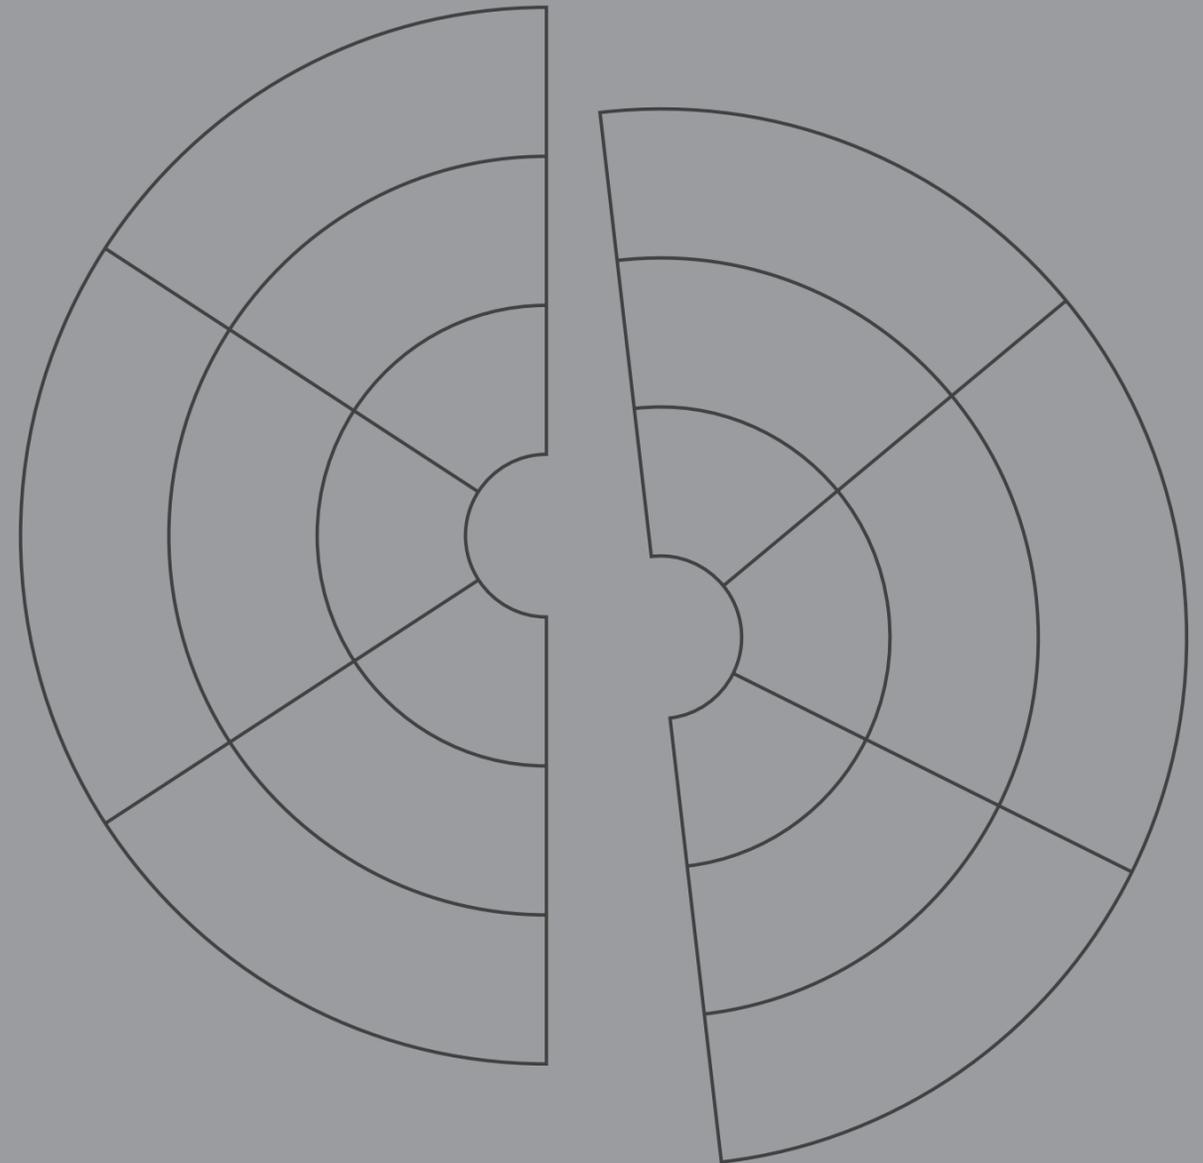

“Work is always about people: how we solve problems, alone or together; the tools we need; our expectations of the spaces we use. We continually explore three essential Work Modes that help us design with empathy for the ways that people can thrive at work.”

John Hamilton
Director of Global Design, Coalesse

Social Connection.

It's about building trust.
Spaces for social connection encourage us to talk and listen. They're the settings that provide the intervals each day where strong bonds are created — by meeting face to face in relaxed, candid and valued conversations.

---

Social connection builds the soft skills we need in modern work, to develop the empathy, trust and openness that are essential to getting things done.

Brand space.

Lobby and reception areas are now expected to do much more. They're ambassadors for your entire culture while also acting as branded social settings for initial greetings and meetings of minds. Thoughtfully designed seating, with a welcoming soul and many ways to create groupings, makes the difference.

Natural gathering.

So often, the catalyst for successful work is simply a great conversation. Lounges and living room-style spaces warmly invite people to sit down and talk. Informal gatherings — in an open plan or a dedicated room — invite the spontaneous postures that can foster richer connections.

Creative Collaboration.

How we generate great work.

Work gets better when we have spaces that help us create content together.

Creative collaboration is encouraged in settings where we can use all the tools of modern work — comfortably and intuitively — to help teams excel.

Creative center.

Meetings today are less formal and more dynamic in collaboration than ever before. The conference room is softening to play multiple roles as technology evolves and more tools are incorporated into powerful work sessions. Soulful design can streamline the gadgets and reflect the real creators: people.

Focus and Rejuvenation.

Time to regroup.

Workspaces only do half the work if they don't provide for vital downtime and mental absorption. Deep thinking comes from states of concentration that are cared for in quiet, personal settings with fewer social interruptions.

Sanctuary.

Enclosed personal settings create a sense of purpose and privacy amid open plan spaces. Enclaves bring the virtues of downtime to the forefront of work, for unwinding stress as well as thinking with deep focus. ## Adaptation.

We know work is fluid. Spaces should be, too. Socializing can quickly turn into creative generation around a new idea; solo time can open to include collaboration. We equip a range of in-between areas that can adapt to all kinds of work, depending on what activity is needed in the moment.
